Abstract Chlamydia trachomatis is the most common sexually transmitted infection in the United States. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of C. trachomatis in a community-based sample of young adults. A cross-sectional study was conducted in a community-based sample of young adults (ages 18-24) in a large, urban, inner-city area. The prevalence of C. trachomatis was 1.2% (95% CI 0.4-2.0%). The prevalence of C. trachomatis was significantly higher in those who were sexually active (1.8%) than in those who were not sexually active (0.4%). The prevalence of C. trachomatis was significantly higher in those who were sexually active with a new partner (2.5%) than in those who were sexually active with a long-term partner (0.8%). The prevalence of C. trachomatis was significantly higher in those who were sexually active with a partner who was not using a condom (2.5%) than in those who were sexually active with a partner who was using a condom (0.8%). The prevalence of C. trachomatis was significantly higher in those who were sexually active with a partner who was not using a condom and who were sexually active with a partner who was using a condom (2.5%) than in those who were sexually active with a partner who was using a condom (0.8%). The prevalence of C. trachomatis was significantly higher in those who were sexually active with a partner who was not using a condom and who were sexually active with a partner who was using a condom (2.5%) than in those who were sexually active with a partner who was using a condom (0.8%).
